This unique painting, dedicated to the great modern history of the Irish Major Champions, started when ten-year-old cancer patient, Brennan Simkins, suggested to world renowned artist, Jace McTier, that he paint a "four-leaf clover."

"I thought it was a unique and excellent idea!" said McTier, having been inspired by Brennan's four year fight in surviving four bone marrow transplants to defeat Acute Myeloid Leukemia.

"We wanted to do this for Brennan and for the Press On Fund in an effort to find a CURE," says McTier. "Having each golfer sign their part of the clover, I can see their hearts in here too." Brennan came up with the design concept and helped Jace begin the paintings.

"He attacked the canvas with absolute certainty and boldness. His brush work and use of color set the tone for the entire project. I've had the great opportunity to paint some of the greatest athletes and fighters in sports history and I've never seen anyone with more fight and fire in their eyes than Brennan. His life, attitude and story are an inspiration to thousands of people and my family has been blessed by his perseverance and his desire to Press On." - Jace McTier

Lucy McTier

A portraitist since 1979, Lucy McTier has work hanging in over 400 public and private collections and in select galleries throughout the world. Lucy had the opportunity to paint President Ronald Reagan in 1985 and present him with his portrait in the Oval Office along with her husband and five-year-old son, Jace. Lucy also paints children's illustrations, biblical themes, sporting art and wildlife. On the average, McTier paints eight to fifteen paintings a year, and is currently designing and painting public murals as well as commissioned portraits.

"Lucy's work is beautiful and she captured not only the likeness but the essence of my love for riding.... This (portrait of El Alemain) makes me feel like I am back at home."

- Ronald Reagan

Hailed as the next Leroy Neiman, Jace McTier's bold color and powerful use of impasto ranks him among today's leading sporting artists. With work collected by such clients as Angelo Dundee and George Foreman to corporate commissions, his paintings benefit charities through the sale of his original work as well as print sales. A recent project includes a joint venture with the Press On Fund and Jack Nicklaus to aid in finding a cure for childhood cancer.

In 2009, McTier teamed up with Angelo Dundee to recreate the history of boxing through the great trainer's eyes. To Jace, this was a dream come true. Master works such as "Titans of 5th St." as well as his interpretation of the "Phantom Punch" (or "Anchor Punch" that lifted Sonny Liston off the canvas and propelled Ali on his path to greatness) have been displayed all over the world and have brought McTier to meet and paint sporting legends such as Muhammad Ali, George Foreman and many of the boxing world's greats.

Jace's work underscored the talents of Dundee so faithfully that Jace was asked to allow his work to serve as a tribute on stage for Angelo's funeral in Tampa, Florida in early 2012. From the power and beauty of an equestrian event, the grace of tennis and golf, down to his violently beautiful interpretation of the sweet science of boxing- Jace captures the athlete's adrenaline rush on canvas. Recent works include the middleweight champion, Sergio Martinez, and he has released a line of products associated with both Sergio and the Miami 5th St. Gym.

Working with the Press On Fund and budding artist Brennan Simkins, a ten-year-old survivor of Adult Myeloid Leukemia, Jace has been able to create an Irish assemblage of major champions centered on a four-leaf clover design. Rory McIlroy, Darren Clarke, Pdraig Harrington and Graeme McDowell (painted on four canvases) are tied together with the central clover element. With broad strokes and no fear, Brennan helped Jace begin the series and designed the clover where the paintings join together. The work is a tribute to the golfing greats of Ireland and to the power of love for the sport. Jace resides with his wife, Rachel, and their son, Eric, in their studio home near Augusta, Georgia.

"This kid is the next Neiman. LeRoy is a great friend of mine, I helped him get started in boxing early by inviting him to sketch Carmen Basillio in the 50's and Jace knows his stuff. His knowledge of technique and use of color are fantastic! The painting he did of Ali throwing that right hand against Foreman in Zaire and the picture of Willie Pastrano- Willie never looked so beautiful!"

- Angelo Dundee

"Jace McTier and his art have both emerged as two of the most positive and dynamic influences in our personal lives and in our emission to cure pediatric cancer. Individually, Jace is one of the kindest and most generous people I know. I see his gift as something so much more than that of the artist, but as the capacity to communicate understanding and compassion through the graceful stroke of a brush."

- N. Turner Simkins
